AN ANECDOTE OF GRANT. The Chilling Reception He Gave a Delega tion From South Carolina The assertion that General Grant has never been a profane man, as many of our generals were, has recently been illustrated by anecdotes showing that he refrained from swearing under very trying circum-stancer. I never heard the General swear, says a writer in the Washington Critic, but I certainly saw him mad enough to make things blue if he had broken out. In the spring of 1874 a delegation came here from a tax-payers' convention in South Carolina to expostulate sgainst the intolerable extrawagance, folly and fraud intolerable extravagance, folly and fraud of their State Government. Frank Moses, "the young native Governor," as he had been dubbed by those who thought carpet-baggers the sum of all evil, who had shown them that the finger of Moses was heavier than the loins of Scott, was nearing the cleen of his term. To prepare for ing the close of his term. To prepare for a desperate effort to redeem the State, a non-partisan tax-payers' convention was called, and the result was "an appeal to which was indicative of disaster to those ne grinned at. General M. C. Butler, now Senator, cer-General M. C. Butler, now Senator, certainly construed it as a danger signal, for he said to me: "Now, I wonder what Patterson has been up to?" The delegation was not long in getting out. When they filed into the reception room Grant was standing to receive them, one clinched hand resting on the table, an angry flush upon his face, and an expression of the eye filter for the battle-field than the reception room. He went through the ceremony of introduction coldly, and then said: "What can I do for you?" W. D. Porter, Charleston's most famous lawyer, ceremony of introduction coldly, and then said: "What can I do for you?" W. D. Porter, Charleston's most famous lawyer, presented the resolutions of the convention and the protests of the tax-payers of South Carolina against the continued existence of the State Government. Mr. Luthers unrolled three longproof-sheets of an individual protest, which he would have proceeded to read had not Grant, with an impatient gesture, interrupted him. "Gentlemen," said he "that all you have to say concerning the present government of South Carolina is true I do not admit or deny. The administration of affairs in that State is in the hards of those who were elected by a large misjority of the people to represent them; you must find your remedy at the ballot box; but even if I had it in my power to prevent the evils of which you complain, I do not think I am bound to do so. Why should I help those who shamefully abuse me? The convention which sent you here even dragged the mame of my wife into its debates and made her a subject of false and scandal-ones accusations." name of my wife into its debates and made her a subject of false and scandal ous accusations."

The delegation was dumbfounded. The members had not expected any very warm sympathy, but this turning of the tables was too sudden to find them prepared. Those who had noticed the exit of "Honest John Patterson" were, however, not so much surprised at Grant's familiarity with the proceedings of the convention. That a sly politician had primed Grant for the reception, and on the table close to Grant's hands was a newspaper clipping—the report of General Mart Gray's speech in the convention.

He denounced him as a drunken tyrant, not a whit better than his fellow-radicals in South Carolina. FASHION NOTES.

Tricotine satin, both plain and changes le, is a new and beautiful material.

Ruching for neck and wrists, in black, nave a fine frosted gold cord run in the Challies, once largely worn, have been revived under the old name, and are shown in dainty colors and patterns.

Pretty dresses for children are of soft gray and fawn-colored plaids, finished with plaitings of Jersey cloth, in the new crim-son and blues. Spring wool fabrics are quite attractive in color and texture. The tendency is to twilled materials, not so rough in appear-ance as those of last season.

Among the charming novelties are gauze ribbons. They are in ecra, cream, deep red and have tiny chenille dots. The edges are finished in fine silk scallops.

The art of painting lace to harmonize with the material to be trimmed with it has been recently introduced in London. The effect is that of beautiful embroidery

Plaids will be largely employed as garnitures for plain stuffs. Costumes of surah in any of the light spring shades of the plain material matched with plaids of the same shades, mixed with brighter colors, are very attractive.

At a recent fashionable marriage in London the bridesmaids wore long tulle vails streaming from wreaths of yellow blossoms. Their bouquets matched these and, as the rest of their dress was white, they must have looked very spring-like.
